Keeping Tractors in Action

It's all about knowledge!

Sourcing the widest range of tractor parts in NZ is the easy part. Having the expert knowledge to guide you, our customer, is something that is built up with years of experience.

Our team has plenty of that and that experience has been extended with the arrival of Shane Bennett.

Shane is a qualified diesel mechanic with experience in tractors, trucks and telehandlers and many other types of machinery.

In this edition we highlight a range of implements that can make life easier for you as well some handy tips for storing them over the winter months.

Kind regards,

Tim Baker

Storing Tractors and Implements

Advice from AgSpares

Whether you have a fleet of tractors, hay balers, implements, bikes, telehandlers or just one old dozer, how you put your gear away for both short and long term storage determines how ready they are when you get them back out.

Main maintenance tips for machinery storage:

Regular CMP

Cleaning Maintenance Protection

This will save you a lot of trouble next time you need them.

- A good squirt with a high pressure hose removes excess dirt, seeds, dust and biodegradable matter.

NOTE: Don't put a cover over the equipment until it has fully dried, as trapped water can cause rust.

- As you are cleaning, check that all belts, hoses, electrical connections and hydraulics aren't loose or leaking.
- Any scratches on the metal body will need paint, wax or grease.

- Fluid levels and filters should be checked and serviced before locking away for winter.
- All ground-working components including drills, tillage tools, blades and ploughs will need a coating of lubricant.
- Reverse-park the machine into the shed to enable full vision when exiting. Lower all the attachments and hydraulics to the ground and apply the handbrake.
- Implements and heavy attachments should be stabilised or tied down to ensure they don't fall and cause injury.
- When reconnecting attachments, never stand between the attachment and the tractor.

TIP: Consider converting to a quick hitch system.
